SPONSOR: Christofanelli

This bill establishes the "The Parents' Bill of Rights". Such rights include but are not limited to the following: the parent's right to participate and direct the education of their child, the right to access and view curricula, academic performance, and financial information; the right to choose educational options specifically authorized by statute for such student; and the right to opt a child out of any content that is disagreeable to the parent. Additional restrictions are placed on schools to prevent employees and students from being compelled to adopt, affirm, adhere to, or profess ideas as specified, including ideas related to race, ethnicity, color, or national origin superiority.
